A MAGNIFICENT GIFT...

Last Sunday morning I met with a small group of our Spanish speaking parishioners who had asked to see me. They told me that they love this parish and feel extremely welcome here. They told me that, because they are immigrants, they feel the need to belong to something here. Regina Pacis Parish is their answer. (Can you imagine how moved I was to hear this?)

Then they spoke about the efforts we are making to support the Annual Catholic Appeal. Though relatively poor, they wanted to help. However, they felt hindered in making pledges because they would have to indicate their addresses on the pledge form and they are afraid. All the tough talk on the part of our government leaders has made them terribly afraid of being deported. Even though the President insists that only "criminal aliens" are being deported, they know differently---and none of them are criminals in any way! So, they do not freely give out their address.

Still wanting to help the parish meet its goal in the Appeal, they created their own way of contributing in an anonymous manner. Yesterday, they very happily gave me over $18,000 in cash for the Appeal from our Spanish speaking parishioners! INCREDIBLE!!!

In thanking them I told them that they are contributing to our parish in many ways. Their attendance at Mass on the weekend, fills the Basilica. They have three music groups for the liturgies. They have weekly Holy Hours, prayer meetings, Bible studies, Adult Faith Formation every Sunday morning after their 9:15 Mass, frequent processions and special devotions, they easily volunteer to serve as ushers, lectors, Eucharistic ministers, their kids are learning the faith through their example, and EVERYONE notices. These gifts which they give us are worth more than money!

On behalf of our whole parish, I thanked them for choosing to belong to us.

Msgr. Ronald T. Marino

Thank You ☺

Dear Mom of an Adopted Child,

I met you in adoption education class. I met you at the agency. I met you at my son's school. I met you online. I met you on purpose. I met you by accident. It doesn't matter. The thing is, I knew you right away. I recognize the fierce determination. The grit. The fight. Because everything about what you have was a decision, and nothing about what you have was easy. You are the kind of woman who Makes Things Happen. After all, you made this happen, this family you have.

Maybe you prayed for it. Maybe you had to convince a partner it was the right thing. Maybe you did it alone. Maybe people told you to just be happy with what you had before. Maybe someone told you it simply wasn't in God's plans for you to have a child, this child whose hair you now brush lightly from his face. Maybe someone warned you about what happened to their cousin's neighbor's friend. Maybe you ignored them.

Maybe you planned for it for years. Maybe an opportunity dropped into your lap. Maybe you depleted your life savings for it. Maybe it was not your first choice. But maybe it was.

Regardless, I know you. And I see how you hold on so tight. Sometimes too tight. Because that's what we do, isn't it?

I know about all those books you read back then. The ones everyone reads about sleep patterns and cloth versus disposable, yes — but the extra ones, too. About dealing with attachment disorders, breast milk banks, babies born addicted to alcohol, cocaine, meth. About cognitive delays, language deficiencies. About counseling support services, tax and insurance issues, open adoption pros and cons, legal rights.

I know about the fingerprinting, the background checks, the credit reports, the interviews, the references. I know about the classes — so many classes. I know the frustration of the never-ending paperwork. The hours of going over finances, of having garage sales and bake sales and whatever-it-takes sales to raise money to afford it all.

I know how you never lost sight of what you wanted.

I know about the match call, the soaring of everything inside you to cloud-height, even higher. And then the tucking of that away because, well, these things fall through, you know.

Maybe you told your mother, a few close friends. Maybe you shouted it to the world. Maybe you allowed yourself to decorate a baby's room, buy a car seat. Maybe you bought a soft blanket, just that one blanket, and held it to your cheek every night.

I know about your home visits. I know about your knuckles, cracked and bleeding from cleaning every square inch of your home the night before. I know about you burning the coffee cake and trying to fix your mascara before the social worker rang the doorbell.

And I know about the follow-up visits, when you hadn't slept in three weeks because the baby had colic. I know how you wanted so badly to show that you had it all together, even though you were back to working more-than-full-time, maybe without maternity leave, without the family and casseroles and welcome-home balloons and plants.

And I've seen you in foreign countries, strange lands, staying in dirty hotels, taking weeks away from work, struggling to understand what's being promised and what's not. Struggling to offer your love to a little one who is unsettled and afraid. Waiting, wishing, greeting, loving, flying, nesting, coming home.

I've seen you down the street at the hospital when a baby was born, trying to figure out where you belong in the scene that's emerging. I've seen your face as you hear a nurse whisper to the birthmother that she doesn't have to go through with this. I've seen you trying so hard to give this birthmother all of your respect and patience and compassion in those moments — while you bite your lip and close your eyes, not knowing if she will change her mind, if this has all been a dream coming to an abrupt end in a sterile environment. Not knowing if this is your time. Not knowing so much.

I've seen you look down into a newborn infant's eyes, wondering if he's really yours, wondering if you can quiet your mind and good sense long enough to give yourself over completely.

And then, to have the child in your arms, at home, that first night. His little fingers curled around yours. His warm heart beating against yours.

I know that bliss. The perfect, guarded, hopeful bliss.

I also know about you on adoption day. The nerves that morning, the judge, the formality, the relief, the joy. The letting out of a breath maybe you didn't even know you were holding for months. Months.

I've seen you meet your child's birthparents and grandparents weeks or years down the road. I've seen you share your child with strangers who have his nose, his smile ... people who love him because he's one of them. I've seen you hold him in the evenings after those visits, when he's shaken and confused and really just wants a stuffed animal and to rest his head on your shoulder.

I've seen you worry when your child brings home a family tree project from school. Or a request to bring in photos of him and his dad, so that the class can compare traits that are passed down, like blue eyes or square chins. I know you worry, because you can protect your child from a lot of things — but you can't protect him from being different in a world so intent on celebrating sameness.

I've seen you at the doctor's office, filling out medical histories, leaving blanks, question marks, hoping the little spaces don't turn into big problems later on.

I've seen you answer all of the tough questions, the questions that have to do with why, and love, and how much, and where, and who, and how come, mama? How come?

I've seen you wonder how you'll react the first time you hear the dreaded, "You're not my real mom." And I've seen you smile softly in the face of that question, remaining calm and loving, until you lock yourself in the bathroom and muffle your soft cries with the sound of the shower.

I've seen you cringe just a little when someone says your child is lucky to have you. Because you know with all your being that it is the other way around. But most of all, I want you to know that I've seen you look into your child's eyes. And while you will never see a reflection of your own eyes there, you see something that's just as powerful: A reflection of your complete and unstoppable love for this person who grew in the midst of your tears and laughter — and whose loss would be like the loss of yourself.

*I wrote this piece after reading an essay by Lea Grover titled "Dear Less-Than-Perfect Mom." The post by Lea was wonderful, and it made me think about us moms who found our sweet babies through adoption, and how we face unique challenges. I hope you enjoy it, whether you are the parent of an adopted child or not.

En Sintonía.Los Diez Mandamientos en el catolicismo

Los Diez Mandamientos se refiere al conjunto de las enseñanzas oficiales del Catecismo de la Iglesia católica. Estos mandamientos o preceptos, vulgarmente llamados Diez Mandamientos son esenciales para la salvación y crecimiento espiritual de las almas que pertenecían a Dios. La enseñanza religiosa de los Mandamientos está basada primordialmente en el Antiguo y Nuevo Testamento, en el Nuevo Testamento, Jesús reconoció su validez e instruyó a sus discípulos a que los perfeccionaran, exigiendo una justicia superior a la de los escribas y fariseos. Resumidos por Jesús en dos grandes mandamientos que enseñan el amor a Dios y al prójimo, estos tienen como finalidad educar a las personas en ambos aspectos. Los primeros tres mandamientos exigen respeto hacia el nombre de Dios, la observación del Día del Señor, y la prohibición del culto a otros dioses. Los restantes tratan de las relaciones con el prójimo, como por ejemplo el vínculo entre padre e hijo; y prohíben la mentira, el hurto, el asesinato, el adulterio y la avaricia. Según las propias palabras de Jesús, es necesario observar los Diez Mandamientos para entrar en la vida eterna. El Nuevo Testamento (o la Nueva Alianza). Para Jesús, toda la Ley de Dios se cumple y se resume en el doble y único mandamiento del amor a Dios y al prójimo: Amarás al Señor tu Dios con todo tu corazón, con toda a tu alma y con toda tu mente. Este es el mayor y el primero de los mandamientos. Y el segundo es semejante al primero: amarás a tu prójimo como a ti mismo. De estos dos mandamientos depende toda la Ley y los Profetas:
